Red-Light Running Deaths:
Key Takeaways (Last 10 years)

- Red-light running deaths have stayed dangerously high over the past decade, now exceeding 1,000 fatalities per year.
- In 2023, about 1,086 people were killed and 130,000+ were injured in red-light-related crashes.
- Fatalities today are higher than the 2017 “10-year high,” showing the problem continues to worsen.

Why This Matters:

- Many victims are not the violators, but passengers, pedestrians, cyclists, and other drivers.
- These crashes often cause severe side-impact collisions at intersections.
- The result is preventable deaths, serious injuries, and long-term financial and emotional harm.

Safety Tips for Drivers:

- Slow down for yellow lights — don’t try to beat the signal.
- Check intersections carefully, even on green.
- Avoid distractions and stay alert in traffic.
- Leave extra space and time to react to red-light runners.

Texas House Bill 19 & Senate Bill 39 – Affect Truck Accident Cases

- Texas House Bill 19 was designed to protect trucking companies, not the people seriously injured or killed in truck crashes. It keeps important safety evidence away from juries at the start of a case.
- Victims are forced to prove who caused the crash without access to the full story, while trucking companies get extra legal protection.

- Senate Bill 39 pushes these limits even further, adding more roadblocks before juries can hear about unsafe trucking practices.

- These laws delay accountability, even when poor hiring, training, or safety decisions may have caused devastating injuries.
- Truck accidents are often far more severe than car crashes, yet victims face more legal hurdles than ever before.
- For injured Texans and grieving families, this can mean longer cases, higher costs, and fewer chances for real justice.
